

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to allow their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the freedom a legitimate company to air programming of their choice. There is nothing wrong here.

Yes Sinclair, like every other privately owned broadcaster uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. Stolen Honor is a program with a particular point of view that is woefully under represented in the media today. This program represents balance, not bias. It serves the public interest by showing an different point of view. I never hear any complaints in the media about the constant din by Michael Moore on the public airways, or Kitty Kelly, Richard Clarke or any of the other left wing supporters of John Kerry. Nobody demands equal time for the swift boat vets. Why is that??

The howling response to Sinclair's legitimate exercise of free speech shows that the airways are working and that more than one more point of view is finally getting aired in this overwhelmingly liberal media culture. The FCC should, with all respect, stay out of the way.
